

THE POST

Vol. 33, No. 24 DELIVERED EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING

MAY 26, 1982

The 80-unit Cypress Point Condominiums being built on the bluff above the Alto Serramonte

Shopping Center on Gellert Boulevard in Daly City are evidence of the emphasis by local developers on condominiums. Of a total of 1,247 new units being built or proposed for Daly City, 1,055 are condominiums. The city also has heard that the owners of more than 4,000 of Daly City's 9,000 apartments are thinking about converting them into condominiums.

Several apartment complexes eye conversion

The Crown Colony apartments in Daly City are not the only ones in Daly City that may be converted into condominiums.

Don Fleming, Daly City's community development director, said the Planning Department has received inquiries about the city's proposed condominium conversion ordinance from representatives of the Woods Apartments and the Serra Heights Apartments.

The three complexes comprise more than 4,000 of the city's 9,000 apartments.

Fleming said officials from all three complexes attended the meeting after the City Council passes its proposed ordinance before deciding whether to convert their units.

The proposal outlines stringent steps that apartment owners must take before converting their units. It forbids owners to raise rents by a year after they submit a conversion application and it allows tenants the first opportunity to buy converted units.

It prohibits owners of large complexes to convert all of them at once and forbids owners of buildings with less than 20 units to convert them at all.

With 3,000 apartments, the Westgate Apartments make up the biggest rental complex in Daly City. Crown Colony has 927 units; Serra Heights 280.

Fleming said there are three other large apartment complexes in Daly City that could convert if their owners desire: the 500-unit Suburban Reality complex on Claremont Avenue, the 60-unit Boulevard Apartments, the 180-unit Lincoln Vista Apartments above Serramonte High School and the 180-unit Danica Heights Apartments next to St. Andrews Church on Southgate Avenue.

But Fleming said the proposed ordinance would require all of these complexes to make physical modifications in their apartments before converting.

Most of the new units being built or proposed for Daly City are condominiums. Of the total of 1,237 units on the horizon, only 192 are single-family homes. No more apartments have been proposed.

If all of those projects were approved and built, Daly City would have a total of 1,232 condominiums, about 9,000 apartments and about 22,200 houses.

Crown Colony tenants don't want theirs converted

Residents of Crown Colony Apartments in Daly City continued their fight Monday against a proposal to turn the 920-unit complex into condominiums.

A handful of residents attended a City Council study session, where the city's proposed condominium conversion ordinance was discussed.

The ordinance is on next Monday's regular council meeting agenda for a first reading. Although the proposal is a general policy, much of the discussion Monday focused on how it would apply to Crown Colony.

Crown Colony resident Ed Davis told the council he makes a "decent salary," yet he cannot qualify for a $50,000 loan to buy a unit. He said he is not alone.

"Most tenants at Crown Colony cannot afford to buy a home," he said, even if they are earning $20,000 to $25,000 a year.

If the 920 units are taken off the rental market, Davis wanted to know where those residents would go.

"Housing is short all over," he noted, citing figures showing the rental vacancy rate in Daly City is only 1.5 percent.

Daly City resident Julie Castellan said, "If they are paying rent, it proves they cannot buy a home."

Another Crown Colony resident, Marlene Kuhn, said she is a nurse making a good salary, yet she will not be able to buy a unit.

"I wonder what will happen to the elderly, the handicapped," said Miss Weeks. "Who also expressed concern that the parking standards in the proposed ordinance are not strong enough."

She also wants the owners of Crown Colony to have to do more than just submit a relocation plan for the tenants. Miss Weeks said submission of a plan does not mean relocation assistance actually would be offered.

Terri Grube, who also lives at Crown Colony, said after the meeting that tenants will meet Thursday at 8 p.m. to discuss the conversion. She said about 200 of the residents met Sunday at the complex to review the conversion proposal.

Afterward, she said, "What I'm fighting for is the right to live where I want."

A representative of the developer, who has purchased an option to buy the complex, attended the Sunday meeting.

David Kuhn of Cadilac Fair View Homes West of Newport Beach told the council Monday that his company is working on a finance package that would require residents to pay off their loans.

He said his company probably can get a package requiring only a 10 percent down payment, and there is a chance residents may only have to make a 5 percent down payment.

Although residents' house payments were higher than the rents they were paying, Kuhn said he showed renters Sunday the benefits of owning their own home.

After hearing the residents' concerns, Daly City resident Conrad Pavella suggested a moratorium on conversions until the many questions about the issue are resolved.

Mayor Victor Kyrikakis rejected the suggestion.

He said, "This ordinance has been studied for quite some time."

Other council members had few reactions to the ordinance, although Councilman Andrew Giannona had concerns about the stand-protecting requirements. He wants an ordinance to state explicitly that condominium conversion units must meet city standards required of all other housing units.

City Attorney Albert Polonsky had said the units must meet city codes for noise standards, or else the owners must be notified it does not.

Councilman William Schumacher called it "essential" that the city have an ordinance. Otherwise "we're wide open," he asserted.

The city attorney had said that because there is no conversion ordinance, there is nothing now to stop a developer from converting an apartment building into condominiums and evicting everyone.

Pavella called the proposed ordinance strong.

He said, "No developer can meet the requirements of this ordinance anywhere in Daly City."

Three local students selected for round-the-world voyage

Drake took it 400 years ago

Three Jefferson Union High School District students have been selected to sail on portions of an all-around-the-world trip that traces Sir Frances Drake's path around the world four centuries ago.

The sponsor of the trip, Outward Bound, Inc., notified Ruben Jacquez, 16, Dion Highland, 17, and Wendy Goodwin, 16, last week (June 13) that they have been chosen to participate in three-month legs of the voyage.

They will sail on a 150-ton ship called "Eye of the Wind" that is similar to the vessel Drake sailed.

Ruben and Dion attend Jefferson High School in Daly City. Wendy attends Oceana High School in Pacifica.

The three students were among 40 youngsters aged 17 to 24 from across the United States who recently participated in try-outs for the program. They were through the finals in Albuquerque.

The group could leave on "Operation Drake," as it is called, as soon as this summer or as late as next summer on the voyage, which began in 1978. It is not likely that all three will sail on the same portion of the trip.

The organization footing the bill, Outward Bound, is an international organization formed by people convinced that youngsters benefit from learning wilderness survival skills.

A brochure describing the voyage promises, "The going gets rough. Participants are expected to help out on board ship and assist in humanitarian projects when the ship docks."

The students were ecstatic at the news that they had been selected.

I think it's great. How many kids get to go around the world at age 16?" said Wendy.

All three had heard about the program from environmental education instructor Renu Taini, who admitted that he would "give anything" to go on a trip like the one the students will take.

Ruben said he felt the three of them had an edge over other young people competing in the try-outs because of their experience in the wilderness on trips organized by Taini.

A BELIEVER IN GOVERNMENT

percent 10-year loan that enabled him, among other things, to remodel half of his kitchen, have a new aluminum window installed, in center photo, and have a new fence built, in photo at right.

Loan changes his tune

Nazario ("Nash") Reyes of Daly City never had much faith in the government.

"They tell you they're going to do all these wonderful things and then they never do them," he said.

Then, much to his surprise, Daly City followed through on its promise to give him an 8 percent 10-year home improvement loan as part of its housing rehabilitation program.

Now Reyes is singing the city's song. "I couldn't believe it this program really worked. I didn't see any results before," he said.

With the $8,500 that he borrowed from Security Pacific National Bank with an interest "write-down" done by Daly City, Reyes had most of his kitchen remodeled and new carpeting installed throughout his house at 354 San Diego Ave.

He got a new water heater, a new water softener, a new hot water tank, fences for his backyard, a fine floor, and most important of all, a whole new wall on the southern side of his house.

Reyes said the existing southern wall was leaking and due to water dripping from the gutter-less house door and that his neighbor has promised to put up a gutter before the next rainy season.

Reyes, who works as a bus driver in San Francisco, added some of his own money and did some of the work himself. His main contribution was new white paint for all the walls.

When he saves enough money, he plans to finish remodeling the kitchen.

His only complaint about Daly City's housing rehabilitation program is that he might have stretched his loan money further were it not for the city's regulations.

The city allows only licensed contractors, electricians and plumbers to do the remodeling. And if a city building inspector finds a spot a building code violation, it must be corrected before the job is finished.

But Reyes only had good things to say about M. Barbara Hill, Daly City's rehabilitation loan officer.

Ms. Hill said the Reyes' home is just one of nine rehabilitation projects that have been completed this year, and that the city's programs loans totaling $140,533 were made for those projects.

She said 33 more loans are being processed with interest rates generally 3 to 4 percent lower than the usual lending rate.

The program is designed to help people living in the old section of Daly City bring their homes up to safe and sanitary housing codes.

Reyes said he once was a strong critic of the program. He recalled that he first applied for a loan last year and figured that the city never did anything about it.

He was disenchanted when the city told him this year that a loan was available.

They city worked very hard for me. I think they did a good job," he said.

If only the government would have more programs like this and they would do what they promise, people would believe in government again.

Mary's Help is ready for any disasters

A disaster can happen at any time. An airplane crash, a fire, an earthquake. The disaster can touch many people with a wide variety of injuries.

Hospital personnel, firefighters, police officers and Medevac teams must be prepared for any disaster on a moment's notice. Lives become dependent on these community groups working together in emergency situations.

To test the preparedness of hospital personnel and physician staff at Mary's Help, the hospital conducts disaster drills. Although the drills are not a result of actual disasters, they are treated with the seriousness of a real disaster and require the cooperation of all community emergency personnel.

Government regulation and the Joint Commission for the Accreditation of Hospitals require hospitals to stage disaster drills at least twice a year.

The script for a recent disaster drill at Mary's Help told of passengers on a train ride whose journey over Devil's Slide in Pacifica resulted in a serious accident. The victims had to be rushed to the hospital by naval helicopter.

The actors were provided by the United States Naval Reserve Unit in Alameda, who donned themselves in tattered apparel and make-up to match their injuries seem more realistic.

Daly City's fire and police departments were at the scene just as they would be in an actual disaster.

Members of the fire department were responsible for clearing the area of dust for the visual security of the helicopter driver.

Police officers were present to maintain traffic control and security around the hospital.

Medevac, San Mateo County's ambulance service, responded and arrived almost as the helicopter landed.

The Medevac team transported the injured victims to the hospital emergency room a block away.

Patients are screened when they enter a hospital emergency room, in what is called a triage area, to determine the priority and appropriateness of treatment they will receive.

Members of the hospital's medical staff, under the guidance of Dr. Donald Wald, participated in the drill by diagnosing the injuries of the accident victims as they arrived in the triage area. The injured victims are then transported to the various areas of the hospital depending on the severity of the injury and treatment required: surgery, recovery, intensive care, emergency department, etc.

A corps of nurses, technicians, and medical records clerks, X-ray technicians and administrative personnel immediately respond to the area while other personnel remain at their stations or assigned areas of responsibility. Support personnel form a labor pool and wait in the hospital auditorium to be called upon for assistance, if needed.

"During a disaster exercise, we do not draw as many people away from normal patient care as we would in a true disaster. We try to make the exercise as realistic as possible by reducing our responsibilities for care to our patients," said Associate Director John Camarano.

Camarano declared the disaster drill a success. "With each drill, physicians and hospital personnel become more aware of the roles they must play in the event of a real disaster. We are especially fortunate to have a concerned Medical Staff eager to participate in the improvement of Disaster Drill performance."

James Tweedie to preach at Broadmoor Presbyterian

James Tweedie will preach at the 10 a.m. worship service this Sunday, June 24, at the Broadmoor Presbyterian Church, 377-37th Street, Daly City.

He and his wife, Jeanine Robinson Tweedie, have just returned from a school year of seminary graduate studies in pastoral ministry at the New College of the University of Edinburgh, Scotland.

She did some medical graduate studies and served three months as a registered nurse at the Western General Hospital there.

Tweedie served here in this area as a seminary student assistant for a year each at Portola High School, St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church in San Francisco, St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church in Pacifica, and Bethany Presbyterian Church, also in Pacifica. He is now looking for a pastoral position in a Presbyterian Church.

The public is invited to this Sunday's service and the coffee time that follows.

Sunday School is held the same hour with infant and small child care provided.

Rev. and Mrs. Herbert Tweedie of the local congregation are the parents of James.

Summer tips for the health of pets

By DR. DAVID R. BARNETT

(Editor's note: Because domestic animals sometimes have health problems during the extra day summer months, the following "Dexter Tips for Pet Health" should be helpful to pet owners.)

1. HEAT PROSTRA-

TION: Most common when pets are locked in an enclosed building. Death can occur if it is impossible to take your pet with you, at least leave the windows partially open and provide a water dish, and then only for a short time. Emergency treatment includes wrapping the head in cool rags or towels and placing the animal in the shade.

2. SUMMER ECZEMA:

Includes skin rashes, hot spots, parasite activity, fleas and other dermatological problems. The answer is parasite control, control of fleas, and annual inoculations.

3. TRAVEL TIPS:

Travel problems that affect humans also bother pets. If you travel, get your pet checked by a veterinarian before leaving. Provide enough room in the car in your vehicle, give them plenty of water and "rest stops," use motion sickness medicine if trips have proven uncomfortable in the past, and bring along a good supply of food. If you don't change the animal's diet, just reduce the amount of food normally served. Make sure your pet has a "dog tag" if you plan to travel far from home. While all dogs in California are officially endemic (thus not requiring rabies inoculations), most of California still has the potential for this dread disease. Rabies can be contracted animal such as a bat, and pets will often play with wild animals when left to roam. Many areas in California have low-cost rabies clinics or you can consult a local veterinarian.

4. DISTEMPER:

Distemper is also serious and once animals have been infected, death is almost certain. Danger signs include the "cold" signs of watering eyes and nose, and of course listlessness. While not contagious to humans, it is easily transmitted from one pet to another. Annual inoculations are recommended.

5. EMERGENCIES:

Road accidents, gunshot wounds or animal fights will often cause an emergency for a family pet. Many areas have emergency veterinary clinics that are open in the evenings or the weekend. Some local animal shelters, humane societies and other emergency service organizations will help you if you are planning to stay in one area for any length of time, put an emergency phone number in a handy location. In case of an accident, restrain the animal with a cloth or rope and carefully put them on a blanket, and lift to your car or vehicle for transportation to the hospital. Keep calm and don't make any unnecessary movements.

6. WATER ACCIDENTS:

Most animals can swim, in lakes or rivers for example, they can drown in the family pool or an irrigation canal.

Frogs are often reported drowning in pools when they are unable to crawl out due to steep or slippery sides. If you have a swimming pool and your pet does swim, make sure they know how to get out or keep them locked up when you are away.

7. SUMMER DIET:

Due to the heat, animals will usually reduce their food intake by 20-25 percent. If they are consistently leaving food, reduce portions at each meal. Conversely, the pet drinks more water in summer. Always have clean drinking water available, especially for the house pet who is content to the indoors.

8. WILDLIFE: Domestic pets and wild animals don't mix and should not be encouraged to fraternize. Injuries and death can occur by fighting animals and even a family pet may always be a disadvantage to being "civilized." Also, leave wild animals in the wild — not only is it against the law in many areas to capture them, but you also should not interfere by penned them up in your back yard or apartment.

9. HAY FEVER: Pets

have hay fever problems just like humans — itchy eyes and constant sneezing. Frequently the same conditions that give discomfort eliminate snails often look like pet food and can eliminate pets too. If you think a pet has been poisoned (symptoms include rapid breathing, seizures, drooling and staggering), rush him to an emergency clinic for treatment. There is no particular antidote for metaddehyde poisoning (most commonly found in snail bait) but quick treatment including induction, intravenous solutions and oxygen therapy will often save the pet's life.

10. SNAKE BITES: Pets who are inquisitive may be bitten by a snake — most often on the nose or head. Extensive swelling may occur, and while usually not fatal, it can be similar to human. In rare cases, medical treatment could include skin grafts or amputation. Treatment may include skin grafts or amputation. Treatment may include skin grafts or amputation.

DC General plan panel to meet

The Daly City General Plan Citizens' Advisory Committee will meet at 7:30 p.m. June 21 at Lincoln Park Clubhouse. Action and Brunswick streets to discuss the development of a Neighborhood Housing Service Program which could significantly expand neighborhood rehabilitation and conservation programs.

Specifically, the question to be resolved at this meeting is: "Should Daly City place $50,000 of federal Community Development Block Grant funds to pay the local share of developing a NHS program?"

The NHS program is a nonprofit corporation which coordinates activities of local government officials, financial institutions and neighborhood residents to improve neighborhood quality.

One of the key elements of the program's success in the past has been its ability to actively involve neighborhood residents in tailoring the program to meet the individual community needs by giving them a majority of the seats on the executive board and on the local committee, according to a spokesman.

For details, visit or call the Community Development Block Grant Program, 240 92nd St., 992-4500, ext. 272.

Fireworks benefit

It is time to begin thinking about Fourth of July celebrations, and what is an Independence Day without fireworks?

Sheldon Lendall, chairman of the Our Lady of Mercy Fireworks sale, is hoping everyone will want to add to the glitter and boom of the nation's birthday. To help with the shopping, Lendall and his committee will be setting up a large red, white and blue tent with all sorts of colorful fireworks in the hope that many localities will visit that sales booth with an eye for business at 10 a.m. June 28.

Proceeds from purchases made at the Our Lady of Mercy booth in the Westlake Shopping Center are pledged to the parish building fund according to Mrs. Shirley McKeon, publicity chairman for the Westlake Catholic Women.

Children who attended the Tuesday story hour at the Bayshore Library this past week had a very special treat.

To celebrate the end of the school year, Librarian Don Whittom added a party to the scheduled story hour attended by the students in Anne Marie Hobson's Abnoba's third grade class from Bayshore school.

Library staffers Georgette King and Claire Showers assisted with the party and refreshments were donated by the Friends of the Daily City Library.

Special guests were City Librarian Samuel Chandler, Librarian John Sullivan, Mrs. Kathleen Brinck, principal of Bayshore School, Mrs. Barbara Carroll, chairperson of the Committee for Children's Services and Mrs. Virginia Tipton, past president of the Friends of the Library.

Following the program the children were invited to sign up for the summer reading club and the summer movie series.

Mrs. Mary McCoy, director of volunteers at Mary's Help Hospital, formally thanked the hospital's guild members for their hours of service to the patients, the Sisters and employees and the staff of the hospital during her report to guild at the recent annual awards program.

"It is a rare, private legend that within many persons who are doing what they wish to do, each individual is here by his or her own choice," Mrs. McCoy said prior to presenting service awards.

Among those honored for exceptional work were Mrs. Jennie Aiello, Mrs. Doris Alemany, Mrs. Janice Batchelder, Mrs. Cheryl Bedford, Mrs. Joy Bipes, Mrs. Eloise Butler, Mrs. Marlene Cimino, Mrs. Irene Cox, Mrs. Angie Cresci, Mrs. Marian Cross, Mrs. Marie DeWar, Mrs. Ronald Domars, Mrs. Lisa Eaton, Mrs. Cathy Felici, Mrs. Anna Franco, Mrs. Dolores Garey, Mrs. Cecile Gray, Mrs. Carmella Guardaldi, Mrs. Jane Hillsman, Mrs. Virginia Jimenez, Mrs. Marie Knowles, Mrs. Carol Krieger, Mrs. Francis Lee, Mrs. William Lenz, Mrs. Pat Lindsey, Mrs. Constance Martorella and Mrs. Pat Mayer.

Mrs. Virginia McKeag, Mrs. Marie Michalske, Mrs. Dorothy Miron, Mrs. Rena Noero, Mrs. O'Donnell, Mrs. Maxine Owen, Mrs. Angelina Paretti, Mrs. Myrtle Pec, Mrs. Prusa, Mrs. Rose Seyler, Mrs. Mary Short, Mrs. Marnie Simmons, Mrs. Loretta Steidle, Mrs. Zari.

Mrs. Tobin, Mrs. Helen Vollert, Mrs. Frances Walsh, Mrs. Margaret Watson and Mrs. Velma Zari.

It has been a week for romantic news in the Franchise Fair, home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Morford in Daly City.

Early in the week news arrived from Germany that their grandson, Mr. Alan Terry, will wed Irene Reichenbach June 29 in Ulm, Germany, and on Father's Day a call from grandson Scott Glyn Heath in Willimantic, Conn., informed us that he will wed Judith Salts at the University of Connecticut Faculty Club on Oct. 20.

FIREWORKS
Helping chairman Sheldon Lendall to get Our Lady of Mercy's red, white and blue fireworks booth set up are Bill Bignardi, Jim Diggins, Jim McKee and Bob Hulsmann. The booth will be located in the parking lot of Westlake Shopping Center, and will be open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. beginning June 28.

Association votes against rehab plan

At the general meeting June 14, Original City Protective Association voted again against proposed rehabilitation plan that seemed to make code enforcement its bottom line. The vote was 34-7.

The vote followed weeks of conference between National Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation officials and homeowners groups. Interested citizens were taken on a field trip to East Oakland where the plan is in operation. The improvements made in that area by the plan had induced lending institutions to make new rehabilitation loans.

Mattie Fleming, representing the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation, presented the proposal to the ODCPA membership meeting at Woodrow Wilson School. The plan provides for banks, foundations, and the city to provide money for low interest loans to applicants after a house-to-house inspection has shown the need for health and safety improvements.

Daly City Councilman William Schumacher, Ernie Pezzola, John Castelan and Harry Smith had explained that the building code could not be applied differently for the project and that the inspectors are under Civil Service with their authority for interpreting the codes.

ODCPA director Leroy Simmons brought out that once an inspection is made, the city would have a record of code violations.

Allen Rose, former president of the Exchange Club of Daly City/Colma, charged the plan resembled a "rip-off" now going on in San Francisco.

The Reinvestment Corporation plan is to take a specific area at a time and inspect every home in order to determine if a revolving fund with low or no-interest loans is to be used to help those who have difficulty in financing the improvements.

Citizens Advisory Committee member Eddie Smith analyzed the vote as the fear of Daly City residents as to how the plan might be implemented.

The reinvestment proposal will come before the Citizens Advisory Committee for consideration June 25. It is located on Clubhouse, Brunswick and Acton streets. The City Council is waiting for public reaction to the plan and will take that into consideration if a hearing is held on it.

Stress-related child abuse is on the rise

By ARVILLE FINACOM

The letters loom large. The words stand bold. "Stamp out child abuse." The dramatic black and white, brushtones posters appear on walls in several BART stations bringing home the message to millions of people at least, that the roots of child abuse guard deep within the American way of life.

Sociologists agree that the problem of child abuse is a personal one affecting children from all economic and intellectual levels. Additionally, in our rapidly-changing, economically and socially stressful society, child abuse is on the rise," says Walt Smith, member-at-large on the board of directors of the San Mateo County Child Abuse Council.

According to Smith, there are 1,000 cases and more reported cases of abuse occurring annually. Smith cites statistics showing more single-parent families in the county and more families where both parents are employed full time. One common characteristic of child abusers is their inability to cope constructively with stress, economic or social. Even with double incomes, many families don't have the skills to manage and they suffer severe economic distress.

Often in a stressed family, parental social and behavioral problems for children are higher than achievable. As a result, children are either abused or left to their own pastimes. That some of these unsupervised pastimes can lead to what society calls delinquent behavior is obvious.

The San Mateo County Child Abuse Council, formed five years ago by a group of interested and concerned citizens, many of the education, medical, health, and social services professionals, has as its primary goal education, not only of the public to the twin problems of child abuse and neglect, but also of professionals to the resources available in the community for prevention and treatment.

To accomplish its purpose, the council has put together several conferences. The initial ones primarily were for professionals, although one in 1977 was designed for the community and its decision makers. It will attempt to alert the public to "its problem of child abuse," says Smith, a member of the staff of the County Office of Education.

Currently, the council offers an in-service program to help teachers, recreation workers, and others who come into contact with children to recognize the symptoms of child neglect as well as physical abuse. About one half of the teachers in public schools in San Mateo County have been trained. They also have access to a variety of the public and private agency resources available to victims as well as the troubled and abusing parents.

Perhaps most importantly, they are tutored in the legal procedures involved in reporting cases of suspected child abuse/neglect. A late May series of classes in such awareness education focused on those working with summer pre-school play groups, playground programs, and in special education classes.

A speaker's bureau brings information about child abuse to high school and community college classes as well as to parents involved in preschool, day care or school-connected groups. Incidentally, PTA, as the oldest and largest parent support group devoted solely to child welfare issues, is represented on the council board by the president of 17th District PTA, the group's county-size organization.

Council members hope that increased awareness among those working with children will provide more help for children and youth in need. However, as the demand grows, the need for more children's services increases. Even though children's services in California were not created by funding cutbacks as other public agencies because state monies are available under legislation authored by former State Sen. Arlen Gregorio, the Children's Services Division of San Mateo County Health and Welfare is swamped with cases and able to help only with the most urgent.

Support of private agencies such as the Parental Stress Hot Lines, operating in the San Mateo and Palo Alto areas, is another community activity. Encouragement and development of a volunteer fund-raising auxiliary remains a goal. South San Francisco attorney Don Ahbach, the 20-year president of the council board, speaks to this need. "We have no funding," he says, "and no staff." As a group, he continues, the council consists of some volunteers who meet monthly, come up with great ideas, then return to the daily pressures of their various professional jobs, finding little spare time to execute dreams.

Ahbach stresses, as does, Smith, the coordination and education activities of the council. "We provide no direct services," say both.

"We simply disseminate information which may help," comments Ahbach, if the council could find some sort of headquarters with at least a phone line so it could list itself and become more of a truly coordinating agency than it is now.

None of the volunteers has time to try grants writing and so foundation money may attend. Call Ahbach at 362-1550, the day ahead for specific room information. For those willing to invest a little time and energy, further involvement may be equally. Although Smith's interest grew naturally from his work in the National Center for Child Abuse and Neglect, Administration of Children, Youth and Families, Children's Bureau, U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Ahbach's came about through his work in the National Center for Child Abuse and Neglect, Administration of Children, Youth and Families, Children's Bureau, U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

On the national level, Vice President Walter Mondale has been instrumental in securing funding to do something about child abuse. Some $40 million is earmarked on the federal level for related projects. But money alone can't solve the problem. What it can do is help publicize the effects, uncover the causes, and perhaps set up an adequate treatment system.

Until we, as individuals, decide that child abuse and neglect is intolerable in a civilized society, it will continue to grow, leaving thousands of young lives will be damaged, distorted, even destroyed, leaving a strange blot on the record of a country founded nearly 203 years ago on the premise of liberty and justice for all."

Jeff's 'Fiddler' worthy project

Let it be known as the year of the play "Fiddler On The Roof," for the teachers of the Jefferson High School District. It was a noble endeavor, a worthy project.

Moshe Lazar — otherwise known as Lon Silverman — stole the show. More than any other actor, he looked the part, creating and spoke the lines as they are supposed to be spoken. As Yente, the matchmaker, Linda Hersh did a grand job.

Then there were the costumes. Each one transformed an erstwhile peddler or peasant of 1905. For such costumes, Joan Jacobi deserves a bundle of roses.

The stage settings were beautiful, yet I was disturbed because they were changed so often. Last night, they were to play in the lecture halls of Daly City without offending the audience with frequent performances by the stage crew?

How can you enjoy the continuity of such a play as "Fiddler On The Roof" or the others we have seen this spring — "The Diary of Anne Frank," "Once Upon A Mattress," "The Wizard Of Oz" and "H.M.S. Pinafore" — when hulking stagehands come waltzing in after every scene, however dramatic? Much of the fault lies with the stages themselves, they

For Fiddler, the lighting illustrated what can be done with the limited resources of the lecture halls. Placing the orchestra behind a gauze curtain, but on stage, added to the effect of the entire performance.

Unfortunately, some of the teachers-turned-actors did not speak their lines so well as the full flavor of Jewish humor came through. Jewish humor depends almost entirely on the teller's idiom and turns on the inflection of the voice. If the actor creates the effect by making a statement and then negating it in another voice.

For example, "I know they're the chosen people, but do you have to choose to be poor?" Or, "Something like this is some sort of a holiday." The inflection of the actor's voice and his gestures make such lines funny. Often, the humor depends on the actor's gesture, a raised eyebrow, the rolling of the hands, or a shrug of the shoulders.

As one critic has written, "These things are difficult to transmit, but they must be if the audience is to feel the real thrill of the play."

Let us hope that the teachers will produce many more plays. In the cultural wastelands of our society such contributions enrich the cultural environment we need to create in our country and state.

Fiddler On The Woods was inspired by the works of Sholem Aleichem, who has been called such things as the Jewish Mark Twain and the Yiddish Charles Dickens. Yet, he was not like them. He created in a completely different idiom than they did.

Indeed, his task was to picture the joys and the deep despair known to a simple people who maintained a culture foreign to that of the lands where they lived. Aleichem's characters were simple Jews, such as Tevye in Fiddler, a naive, kindred, and true soul, became proverbial or, such as his Menahem Mendel, a sort of schlemiel, who constantly was scheming to become rich, but forever fails.

Aleichem did not aspire to be a reformer, yet his work calls to mind questions of injustice and of the responsibility of man. His stories can be found in a book entitled "The Old Country" (Crown Publishers, 1974). They are fun to read and most provocative.

THE DIET CORNER

By Elise Gendar, the Diet Workshop

What does summer mean to you? Two thousand cookies to be supplied for between "Ma, I'm hungry" times?

An avalanche of potato salad because the weather's too warm for a warm meal?

Cold fried chicken in the picnic basket for Saturday's outing?

A consistent supply of change for ice cream?

A six-pack of beer raising its head in the refrigerator for a cold interlude on a warm evening?

Doughnut and coffee breakfasts on those vacation mornings when you want to sleep late?

A weekend at a resort where the entertainment is the 24-hour long meal that constantly fills the dining room?

Is that why you think you can't go on a diet in the months of June, July and August?

Why not think of summer as: The months of fresh strawberries, peaches, plums, and pears?

The time of soft butter lettuce, crispy romaine, curly leaf lettuce, radishes, green peppers, meaty tomatoes, and cold meal salads?

Cold, broiled chicken because it's easier to prepare and better for everyone?

Frozen fresh juice pops made by you waiting in the freezer?

A tall pitcher of iced tea or coffee?

A pre-plan that takes you through any weekend slim and happy?

Toss out your summer food stereotypes. You don't want to be behind the times, do you?

Be the first in your neighborhood to try this as a hot weather specialty.

Windmills

A fascination for many years

By VERA GRAHAM

Maybe it's a sort of "cosmic consciousness" that makes us think about the past, life and nature ... like the circles that find in the windmills of your mind."

For Howard P. Ballard of San Mateo, windmills have been a part of his life and mind since he was a boy days on the plains of West Texas. The windmill, he says, was a symbol of the windmills pumping water all over the countryside ... lifesavers for the ranches, always on the move, taking care of the cows, the coyotes, the birds and the geese, giving them a place of rest and water."

Windmills are more than a nostalgic structure for Howard Ballard. They are a beautiful and benevolent reminder of the past when the simple preserved and treasured. The windmill, he notes, was one of man's first successful efforts to harness one of Mother Nature's great energy sources.

Today, Ballard's windmills dot yards in Sacramento, Modesto, Roseville, Porterville and other places throughout the state.

It was 52 years ago that Ballard really gave in to his yen for the windmill. He found one on a West Texas range and purchased it to haul it home, dismantling it and restoring it to perfection. He put it to work drawing sweet, deep well water.

He is a self-educated expert on windmills. His research shows they were first developed Persia, in the reign of Caliph Omar.

It was introduced into Europe at the time of the Crusades.

The first American windmill underlines a slate career undertaken in the 19th century.

"The windmill was a symbol of the frontier, the westward movement. The windmill, he says, was one of man's first successes to harness one of Mother Nature's great energy sources.

Windmills were brought to this country in its early days by Europeans, and became immensely popular in the 1800s.

The wheel of the windmills varied in size, from a span of 8 to 14 feet. They were made out of steel or wood. In those days, a windmill could be seen on most every farm in the Midwest and the western part of the United States.

"I had a windmill in West Texas, you could see the windmills pumping water in every small town, and on the big ranches, the XIT Ranch, the Goodnight Ranch, the Sprade Ranch, the Ybarra Ranch, Ranchos de Madera, and, of course, the famous King Ranch. The windmill was a life-saver for all of these ranches."

"Spaced about 2 miles apart on a ranch, they provided water for thousands of head of cattle. He does it now at home, a hobby."

The Pedersen & Arnold Mill provides him with all kinds of lumber scraps, which he converts into windmills up to 5 feet high.

Presently, he tries to sell them, he does, but never makes any money out of them, considering the time and skill it takes. Prices range from $15 to $35, but Ballard emphasizes, he's not in the business of building and selling windmills; what he wants people to appreciate is a rapidly vanishing hallmark of Americana.

"Without the windmill," Ballard says, "West Texas, for one, would have died of thirst. There are plenty of other places in this country where that's true."

Ballard's reminiscences evoke classic scenes of American lore.

He recalls, "The old-time cowboy would always stay close to his windmill after riding fence all day. He'd stop, often riding fence all day. The cowboy always chose a spot near a windmill while breaking camp. And when a rancher had to ride, he'd make nothing but take care of the windmills, going from one to another with a grease can and bucket, with pliers and wrenches, in fact, any tool needed. He had to have equipment on hand. You just didn't take off for town to get parts. Towns were far, far away from the ranch."

And Ballard has a cause: Save the windmill.

"Today," he says with a shake of his head, "you can travel around the country, it's striking to see what's happened to the once mighty windmill on which people depended for water in the country."

"No one pays much attention to the sight of an old, dilapidated windmill alongside the road, with its fins half gone, the others bent, the tower rusty, leaning, almost falling down, the weeds growing all around — and no water being pumped."

"Mother Earth still holds the water, waiting for it to be drawn by the windmill. There's still plenty of wind to turn the wheel. Who knows? Maybe people will really work to preserve it to produce energy now that we are faced with the energy problem."

"It is said that history repeats itself. I, for one, would like to see this lifesaver of days gone by come back into its own, so that people could remember that wonderful sound that makes."

"No one pays much attention to the sight of an old, dilapidated windmill alongside the road, with its fins half gone, the others bent, the tower rusty, leaning, almost falling down, the weeds growing all around — and no water being pumped."

"Mother Earth still holds the water, waiting for it to be drawn by the windmill. There's still plenty of wind to turn the wheel. Who knows? Maybe people will really work to preserve it to produce energy now that we are faced with the energy problem."

"It is said that history repeats itself. I, for one, would like to see this lifesaver of days gone by come back into its own, so that people could remember that wonderful sound that makes."

"Spaced about 2 miles apart on a ranch, they provided water for thousands of head of cattle. He does it now at home, a hobby."

The Pedersen & Arnold Mill provides him with all kinds of lumber scraps, which he converts into windmills up to 5 feet high.

"Without the windmill," Ballard says, "West Texas, for one, would have died of thirst. There are plenty of other places in this country where that's true."

Ballard's reminiscences evoke classic scenes of American lore.

He recalls, "The old-time cowboy would always stay close to his windmill after riding fence all day. He'd stop, often riding fence all day. The cowboy always chose a spot near a windmill while breaking camp. And when a rancher had to ride, he'd make nothing but take care of the windmills, going from one to another with a grease can and bucket, with pliers and wrenches, in fact, any tool needed. He had to have equipment on hand. You just didn't take off for town to get parts. Towns were far, far away from the ranch."

And Ballard has a cause: Save the windmill.
